I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The given extract "From Museum. From its Origins to the 21 Century" by Owen Hopkins tells about the symbolic connection between museums and their architecture, arguing that a museum's building can not be separated from its fuction and idenity. It emphasizes that museum buildings do not only serve as a repositories for their collections but also symbolize the essence of the institution they house.

By mentioning I. M. Pei's pyramid glass at the Louvre, the author illustrates how architectiual elements become synonymuos with museums themselves. Moreover, Owen Hopkins describes entering museum as a transformative journey into a different reality where time and space are suspended. He describes museums as sacred spaces existing in the real world but also creating an unreal atmosphere, as architactual marvels that encapsulate the essence of humane culture and history.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life-, this statement from "Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures" by Robert Maisel enacpsulates the profound impact that travel can have on individual's pespective and self-awarness. Travelling opens up opportunities for immersion in diverse cultures, environments, and experiences there by broadening one's understanding of the world and ther place within it. Trough exposure to different cultures, customs, ways of life, beliefs and values travellers gain insights into their own idenity and values allowing of a deeper understanding of their own idenity. By stepping outside the familiar confines of our daily routine, we can gain a broader perspective to our goals, priorities and aspirations.

Moreover, encountering challenges and facing unfamiliar situations while travelling fosters resilience, adaptabillity and problem-solving skills. These qualities are ivalubale not only in the context of travel but also in our everydays lives.

In essence, travel serves as a unique and very pleasent tool for self-discovery and transformation, offering opportunities for introspection, learning and growth. It allows us to gain a clearer understanding of ourselfes and our place in the world, ultimately enriching our lives.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

I am afraid i won't be able to come up with anything better than the original, in which poor illiterate father trying to justify his son, told the professor that they didn't have newspapers at their home, so they unfortunalety hadn't even been aware of Napoleon's illness. Therefore, i won't even try and i will write the following boring ending:

With a heavy heart Jack's father left the professor's office, feeling defeated. However, he refused to give up on his son's dreams. Determined to find a solution he sought out alternative paths for Jack's education. Eventually, he discovered a mentor who recognised Jack's potential and offered to tutor him privately. With renewed determination and support, Jack excelled in his studies.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

One wonderful and surprisingly sunny London morning, a respectable not yet wealthy gentelman was walking to meet his beloved when his attention was drawn to the beautiful flowers growing in the flowerbed. It was not proper for gentelman to pilfer flowers from flowerbeds, but they were so exquisite that resistance was futlie. Moreover, the rules of etiquette dictated that one must always go to one's ladylove with a bouquet. And so, the crime of the century was committed-the gentelman picked a huge bouquet of beautiful fragrant flowers for his lady.

However, the London police work diligently, and just few meters away from flowerbed, the gentelman was caught by a policeman. The poor gentelman was fined and the stolen property in the form of the bouquet was confiscated. And, it seemed like, a shameful story for the gentelman was ended there, but...the tale of the exquisite bouquet couldn't end in a such senseless way. It was so beautiful that policeman couldn't resist. Instead of depositing the flowers as an evidence, he gifted them to his own beloved. After all, the rules of etiquette dictate that gentelmen, even if they serve in the police force, should come to their loved one's with bouquets.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
