I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The passage highlights how a museum's architecture is intrinsic to its character. Structures like the glass pyramid at the Louvre ofter better capture the spirit of the museum than its displays themselves. Such arcitecture represents the mission of the institution as well as the collective character of its holdings, going beyond simple functionating. This architectural embodiments represent culture and history symbolicaly in addition to acting as a physical container. The excerpt also explores the ideas of the museums as heterotopias, which are places where time and space conventions are suspended and where things can exist in both the real and the imagied world. Museums provide one-of-the-kind experiences by showcasting human creativity and establishing a deep link across time by combining things from many eras and cultures through their architecture and carefully chosen contents. This makes museums quintessential that reflect and enhance the cultural and historical narratives they house.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Robert Maisel's quote from “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” emphasizes the enlightning impact of travel. By steppig beyond the confines of familiar surroundings , individuals are immersed in diverse cultures, environments, and philosophies, which in turn broaden their understanding of the world and make them reflect on their own place within it. This exposure to the vast array of human experience allows travelers to reflect on their own lives from a more informed and global perspective.
Travel acts as a stimulus for re-evaluation of one's values, beliefs, and goals against a ider backdrop of human existence. Encountering different ways of life, confronting them new challanges, and engaging in unfamiliar situations force travelers to question preconceived notions and re-asses their walues. This process of external exploration facilitates a deeper internal journey, where the essence of one's identity and aspirations can be distilled and refined.
Maisel's perspective suggests that travel is not merely a physical jorney but a profound emotional and intellectual voyage that offers a unique opportunity to obtain insights into the complexities and peculiarities of life. This holistic understanding nurtures a more nuanced appreciation of the bigger picture of one's life, contributing to a richer and more meaningful existence.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

Jack's father quick on his feet, replied: "I'm sure Napoleon didn't know when Jack would graduate either." The professor, caught off guard, burst into laughter at the unexpected response. His stern demeanor softended, and he agreed to give Jack a second chance, but he emphasized that it is absolutely imperative for him to work hard and persevere.
Jack, immensely grateful for this opportunity, immersed himself in his studies with renewed vigor and not only passed his exams the followinf year but also became one of the top studets of the class.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

In the quaint little town of Sunnyside, where tulips bloomed like a painter's palette, lived Walter, the baker. His days were filled with flour and sugar, but his thoughts were often with Ms. Mabel, the hairdresser, whose smile was sweeter than any cake or muffin he could ever create. One sunny morning, Walter decided to open up about his feelings. He could not think of a better way to express his fondness than through a bouquet of tulips, Sunnyside's pride.
As he meticulously selected the most splendid tulips in the park, Officer Thompson, who always stood guard over the public gardens, approached. With a stern voice, he reminded Walter of the community rules. He fined Walter, the hopeless romantic, for two hundread dollars and confiscated the floweres. The poor baker went back to his little bakery. He swore to himself to give up on love forever, as it distracted him greatly from the one thing he did best - baking cakes and muffins.
In fact, the severe-looking Officer Thompson was not so severe deep down, especially when it came to love. He secretly cherished a certain fondness for none other than Ms. Mabel, the hairdresser. Officer Thompson knew that all women adored flowers and he could not think of a better present to his beloved than the confiscated flowers. He headed straight to her house to gift her the beautiful bouquet of tulips. As Ms. Mabel saw the floral gift, her face lit up like the dawn. She was very thrilled at the sight of the flowers, even though it was the seventh bouquet that Officer Thompson had gifted her that week. The love-struck women did not ponder much over the fact that all the flowers resembled greatly the ones that grew in the Sunnyside central park.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

1). Elevenses

2). Electoral College

1). Elevenses

Elevences is a cherished British custom that entails taking a brief snack break around 11 a.m. in the morning. This tradition underscores the British penchant for structured tea times throughout the day. It is a moment for a light refreshment such as tea or coffee accompanied by snacks. It is a reflection of the social and cultural importance of tea in Britain, symbolizing a pause for leisure and social interaction in the midst of daily routines.

2). Electoral College

The Electoral College stands as a distinctive trait of the American electoral system, established for the purpose of electing the President and Vice Presidet of the United States. This body is composed of electors from each state, whose numbers correspond to the number of congressional delegates. The system is intended to balance the direct voice of the populace with a state-based selection process, ensuring that both bigger and smaller state have proportioal representation in the election of the president.
