I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

According to the author of the extract, a building is an integral part of a museum. When we think of any museum we first imagine the museum building and only then its famous masterpieces. Facades of museums tell us a lot about their contents and the mission of the institution.

Furthermore, the idea of architecture is much more than the museum. It is extremely important to choose the correct architecture style which will display distinctive features of an each museum.

When you walk into museum, you feel like stepping into another world. Museums somehow can exist outside of the present world, they are both real and unreal.

I agree with the author because I think that museums give us a splendid opportunity to enjoy not only paintings or sculptures at exhibitions but also a marvelous intricacy of their architecture. Only museums can give us a chance to temporarily escape from our mundane thoughts.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Other places and regions have always seemed enchanting and mysterious for people. Even since the ancient times people would build ships to travel around the world and communicate with other tribes. There are many reasons why this intrigues people so much. A famous statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel gives us one of the reasons why travelling played a vital role in the evolution of humanity - travelling allows you to better understand and assess the bigger picture of your life.

When you travel you effortlessly learn something new, it can be culture, traditions, religions, art or music of other regions. This all expands your mind and gives you an opportunity to compare your life with the lives of others. Moreover, your personality changes too as you communicate and get acquainted with other people even if they are strangers. When travelling you open new facets of your character and learn new skills which will eventually come in handy one day, making you a better educated and accomplished person.

In conclusion, I presume that travelling helps people to get a better understanding of themselves. It also expands your horizons so that you can see the bigger picture of your life.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The girl noticed that something was wrong and asked him to hand her the bill. The guy felt how his face gradually blush but still gave it to her. Then, out of a sudden his girl-friend suggested that they go Dutch. The guy couldn't believe it - this would save him from such embarrassment! When they walked out, the guy invited her to a dinner at another restaurant next week. This time he will make sure to take enough money!

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

Once upon a time there was a man and one time during his morning stroll in a park he saw a gorgeous flowerbed. The flowers which grew there were adorable and the man immediately decided to steal a few tulips to make a bouquet. Having maked sure that nobody was watching, he sneaked to the flowerbed and started to rip flowers off. Eventually, he made a wonderful bouquet out of the flowers. Then, he wanted to get home as soon as possible and hid the bouquet under the fold of his coat, but, unfortunately, he encountered a police officer. The latter stopped him and fined him by taking away the flowers. The man was desperate and ashamed by his behaviour. The police officer, in turn, when the man went away, decided to take the bouquet home. His wife was happy to see the flowers but, unfortunately, she didn't know where her husband had got them from.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
