I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The author of the text suggests that although museums contain many significant remnants of the past, the vast majourty of people have the evocative memories about its frontage and facade rather than about its inner atmosphere and collections. Additionally, he claims that the process of strolling along the museum halls provides visitors with the opportunity of getting into another universe, full of abstruse concepts and objects, which can not be obeserved in the ordinary reality.

I support the author's point of view and prefer to adhere to his reflections. To my mind, museums have indisputably miracullous atmosphere of unforgettable voyage into the past centuries. There you can explore and notice things invisible in the daily life such as letters expressing affinity or ancient arms, which were used during the great battles and macabre fights. Without a shadow of a doubt, people can firstly think about the musuem's appearance, but when they get inside, they are surrounded by surreptitious remnants of the past, and they can not continue their visit without being elated.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Does travelling really make your life better or being an insular citizen, almost a hermit, is surely a judicious choice? Of course, it depends on special occasions and human's predilections. One person can live in conditions that do not change, and he will think that his life is flawlless as it is. However, this prejudice, to my mind, is erroneous, and does not allow an individual to realize the real imprefections of his life.

For instnace, living in a small town with no opportunities for proper education and not travelling to other countries and cities, may lead to the consequent difficultes with employment. In this case, a peson just does not understand the real level of expertise required for a job in megalopolis. Furthermore, to form an apllication for work as a foreigner, you shoul know the culture and demands of the country that you apply for. Without travelling and enhancing your knowledge, it would be problematic. Consequently, people can not know the true worth and preciousness of their lives, if they do not travel becuse. They are not cognizant about the level of education and life opportunities of other countries or even cities. Additionally, it should be mentioned that a human can form only a close circle of relationships by staying in one place.

All things considered, people can not know if their life is full and abundant without travelling to other contries and getting acquainted with other cultures.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

'Probaly, your children don't know about the date of his death too,' retorted Jack's father disdainfully. He couldn't continue his entreating and decided to argue with that professor. Jack's father thought that evnts are ambiguous, and people can't know for sure when Napoleon had his last breath.

'Then, we should go to the local library and check it once again,' replied professor in a calm tone of voice. When they reached their destination and opened the right book, they were taken aback.

'You are both wrong. I died a few hours earlier than student books claim,' informed Napoleon officiously. After that, professor apologised, and Jack returned to the university.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

Once there lived amicable spouses that enjoyed getting multiple presents. Mr. Clark and Mrs. Clark dearly loved and cherished Mrs.Watson, an elderly lady,who unfortunately, was partly blind. One day she bestowed them with an object of an unparticular use. They racked their brains in vain attempt to find its application but then gave up. "I will offer it to Mr.Elton. He knows for sure how to decorate his floral shop," mumbled Mr.Clark complacent with his own idea.

This undentifiable object was used as an ashtray. Then, Mr.Elton was sagacious enough to realise it wasn't beneficent for him and passed it to his lanky companion Mr.Lawrence, who liked everything precious and unusual. He fixed it on the place visible to everyone in his shop full of quiant and peculiar goods. Little did he know that he made a huge mistake. When Mrs.Watson, dressed in her opulent fur, had her usual morning walk, she saw something that glemed and looked very applealing. She immeditely bought it and decided to pass this, by author's oponion statuette, to her beloved spouses.

'I hope that you will love my present,' said Mrs.Watson elatedly. For Mr.Clark and Mrs.Clark it was like a bolt out of blue. They trembled and their inner terpidation was incessant. As the famous proverb suggests: 'Don't look a gift horse in the mouth.'

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.
