I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

According to the extract, a museum building seems to be the first image that appears in a person's mind whenever they think about this or that treasury of historical artefacts and artistic masterpieces.
In my opinion, such a strong connection between museums as institutions and their buildings is primarily based on the uniqueness of an architect's goal. The creators of museum buildings have to come up with exquisite concepts of the external structure and decoration of these buildings. In fact, they need to make sure that their building serves as a representation of the museum's purpose and contents.

Not only do museums impress people with their architectural beauty, but they also fascinate us with the ability to operate 'against laws of time and space'. Indeed, when a person walks through a museum door, they receive astonishing opportunities to time-travel or explore the most remote corners of our planet.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Needless to say that travelling is an extremely significant aspect of every person's experience. Not only does exploring the world broaden people's horizons, but it also enables them to compare their own life with the lifestyles of citizens of other countries what is proved by the statement.

Personally, I tend to agree with the saying, as I strongly believe that travelling is the most influential way of changing one's world perceptions. Visiting various corners of the planet assists one in improving their understanding of mentality and traditions of different nations. Having immersed into the unknown culture, a traveller inevitably begins to change their views about customs or morality laws of this or that ethnic group. What is more, travelling around the world may encourage people to reflect on their own life and values. Instead of choosing to spend the entire journey on a sandy beach of a luxurious hotel, it is of high importance to try to catch a glimpse of the reality of the locals. By doing so, one gets a chance to adopt some of the locals' virtues. For example, observing the life of Italian people could possibly teach a tourist to enjoy the taste of life, to appreciate the present moment.

All in all, travelling is beyond important for every person since it undoubtedly transfroms our life for the best.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The man was on the verge of admitting his inability to pay for the meal when suddenly a woman rushed to the couple's table with the words, 'I cannot believe my eyes! You are the star of my favorite film!'

In a span of a minute the man was surrounded with tons of people who desired to take a photo with a 'film star'. The guest's fame amazed the head of a restaurant and he announced to the young man that he would not have to pay for the dinner.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

A man in a beige coat walked entered the hair salon. 'Take a seat, please', declared the hairdresser.

Once the man took off his hat, the hairdresser realised that he had lots of work to be done. However, being a rather skillful representative of his profession, he enthusiastically started to create a new image for his client. It took an hour for the haidresser to finish his masterpiece. The client was extremely satisfied with the result and he left the hairdresser with the words of enormous gratitude.

On the way home the man in the beige coat stumbled upon the other man in a beige coat who was also looking for the hairdresser's. Having heard the positive comments from a stranger, the other man in a beige coat came up to the hairdresser. The hairdresser was shocked, he had never seen such fast-growing hair before!

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
