I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. Breaking Down Barriers to Entry

The first and oldest of the three characteristics that define a museum is its collection; there is simply no museum without a collection. Yet the ways we typically understand a museum's collection is, and has always been, heavily weighted towards the objects themselves, rather than the arguably equally important series of decisions that determined how that collection was brought together. Moreover when we visit a museum we rarely see more than a tiny percentage of the objects in its collection. Again, the decisions about what to display and what to keep in storage are seldom acknowledged.

The second key characteristic of the museum is that the collection should be accessible to the public. However, that a collection is open to the public does not automatically mean those who visit are representative of the public. Museum audiences typically skew towards better-educated and more affluent demographics. Free entry is no panacea. Cost is just one barrier to entry, and, while important, may not actually be the biggest one. Social and cultural barriers can be just as strong. Despite some of their best efforts, museums are frequently perceived as elitist and unwelcoming – especially when housed in grand classical edifices as so many still are. Just as a museum cannot consider itself to be a truly public institution unless its staff's demographic makeup reflects the public at large, the same can be said of its audience. Museums cannot be properly public institutions unless they can reach and connect with everyone. Many museums are making huge and consistent efforts to do this, but what is required is perhaps something more profound. Rather than defining themselves as existing somehow beyond the quotidian realities of daily life, museums need to find ways to dissolve the boundaries that exist between them and the outside world – its identities, cultures, politics and everyday realities. Museums have already begun to look to the digital sphere which, as we have already seen, offers a range of new and transformative possibilities of connecting to, and engaging with, a much broader public.

This takes us to the third and final fundamental characteristic of the museum: that it is housed in a building which acts as both container and symbol of the museum's collection and broader mission. This twin function has always been part of the concept of a museum.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The extract insightfully explores the evolving nature of museums, emphasizing the need to reevaluete traditional perceptions and practices to make these insititutions more inclusive and representative of the broader public. It highlighits the inherent limitations in how museums have historucally operated, focusing on the physical collection itself rather than the decision-making processes behind assembling these collections. This approach often leaves a significant portion of a museum's collection unseen and unacknowledged, limiting the public's understanding and engagement.

Furthermore, the text critically examines the notion of accessibility, pointing out that mere phusical access does not guarantee that museums serse a diverse audience. The demographic skew towards more educated and affluent visitors underscoss the presence of social and cultural overcome.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

The statement from the book "Transform Throught Travel: Connecting Across Cultures" by Robert Maisel tell us about travelling and feelings. Travelling give us an oportunity to have positive emotions and feel life from different views. Nature plays a big role in travelling. When you see wonderful nature sights, you think about your life and your goals. You breath clear air and understand that life is pleasant. People have a excelent connect with nature, it helps us to survive.

There are many different types of travelling. Everybody chosses your main aim. It can be extreme, sport, art, relax and even love. You should choose right direction for your trip because you can connect with yourself if you have comfort and special conditions. Some people like to be alone then they think about their future, but other people prefer to discuse their problems with friends or relatives and want to have advice. So the second type of people enjoy travelling with company.

In conclusion, I want to say that many people change your life after travelling as they have seen unknown things and wanted to try or understood that they are unhappy or happy.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The card read, "You are about to embark on a great adventure". The couple laughed, thinking it a quaint coincidence before their holiday. But as they boarder the train, they found themselves upgraded to first class due to an unexpected cancellation. Their seaside holiday was filled with unexpected delights and adventures, making the fortune card's prediction come true in the most wonderful way.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

"Hair, please stop!"
In the heart of a bustiling city lived Oliver, a man of unchanging habits especially when it came to his haircut. But one day his usual barber was unavailible and Oliver found himself at a trendy new salon, where he greeted by a new stylist. Despite his initial disbelief, Oliver agreed to the "makeover".

The haircut he recieved was someting completely new. The master did an excelent work and cut a lot of hair. Hair filled in all flour. The first shock was replaced with smile and the realization that this unexpected change opened up new facets of himself

Leaving the salon, Oliver felt newly light and open to new acquaintances thanks to his unusual appearence. But his hair has grown up very fast and two days ago he was with old hair. He came back to your new barber and asked him to recut him. The barber was shocked and said "Hair, please stop!"

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
