I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

It is known that museums are a really popular place. Therefore, the inside of them contains history of centuries of human being. Walking in a museum feels like going back to the times when those events, creatures or life in general expressed in pictures 35, drawings or sculptures were happening. These feelings of mystery and wonder confuse and create some kind of love towards museums.

It's true that museum is a whole different world. When you step in, you do not want to stop, because the history behind the presented objects may be impressive. What is the feature of each museum is that they let us glance at events from our own angle, giving second thoughts and topics for discussion.

To sum up, I want to say that museums are a human-made work of art. Every detail of the architectal ideas expressed in museums has its own meaning. Museums are like a history book being retold in another way.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

Nowadays travelling topic is one of the most discussed topics in the world. The book by Robert Maisel named "Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across cultures" has got a statement which says that travel makes you a more grateful person. Let me share my opinon on the statement.

There is no doubt that travelling lets us learn more about the world. Our planet is enormous, there are a lot of countries and different cultures. What also makes a difference is the lifestyle. When travelling abroad, we make conclusions about the quality of life there. Those could be either wealthy and prosperous countries with happy people, or a poor country with economics troubles and unsatisied population.

Personally I agree with the statement, because when you travel to both prosperous and poor countries you observe their traditions, lifestyles and daily routine, you realize that some people live a life when you can barely find money for a slice of bread, have no house to live in and other. Meanwhile someone may be rich and have a successful life. There details make us appreciate the life that we are given.

In conclusion, it's worth saying that travel does make us more grateful as we can never know what things might some people go through: we should be empathetic and attentive to people around us.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

She read it aloud and he man was in shock, when he found out that he had won a lottery of a brand-new car created by Elon Musk. Below the information about the prize, there was given a phone number to contact to receive the gift. They immediately called it, and heard a young voice of a lady:"Oh my lord, one more silly person is to go! Happy April fools, my guy!", - the man started crying, it turned out to be a scam.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

It was a hard week and Mr.Cheese decided to go for a walk in the park to clear his mind. While having a walk he was observing the surroundings and a bush of red daffoddils caught his eye. The first thought on his mind was to pick up some for his significant other. It would be a marvelous gift for the incoming Valentine's Day. Making sure that no one was around, he crossed the fence and came up to grab some daffodils. Sneaking on tip toes, he headed home.

Suddenly the policeman caught him and grabbed on the jacket like a snack late at night. The officer made a fee, which was 10 pounds. These 10 pounds could have been spent on the same red daffoddils in the store which was like a mile from then! Mr.Cheese was sad: the policeman took his flowers and kept them to himself. It was ridiculous! Walking back home, he was happy holding a nice bouquet from Mr.Cheese. It doesn't matter that it was stolen: the wife was happier than ever.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.
