I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

Not only museum's works of art, but also its building is essential for the proper understanding. It usually demonstrates to its visitors the full concept of the museum. Unsurprisingly, some people can notice in themselves that architecture is much more remembering than something inside the building. Actually, it's hard to imagine museums' collections without its buildings as they're considered to be two fundamental parts of one main idea.

Undoubtedly, museum is a different world. Stepping into this world means saying goodbye to your routine and enjoying the atmosphere that its collection gives. "Heterotopia", the term used by Michel Foucault, is known for everybody. The state between reality and unreality is given by museums to all its visitors. Personally, I'm sure that museums have their own magic, offering people the opportunity to travel across time and cultures.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

Travelling, without any doubts, can help you understand yourself better. When you visit other countries and cities, penetrating yourself into other culture, you can notice how your own life fits in the bigger picture of the world. You may understand which beliefs and views are better for your personality. Experiencing other cultures around the world gives you an opportunity to speak with your inner world and understand the best way for you to live. Travelling can also open your mind to some new ideas and expand your knowledge of the world and your place inside this world. Pushing yourself out of your comfort zone can challenge your old beliefs and introduce some new concepts. By reflecting about your experience, you can figure out what is more essential for you and make choices that are right for you. Travelling can transform you and help to find a way to yourself. It is worth mentioning that you meet new interesting people who can share some views with you. More importantly, you can attend some activities of particularly one or another culture which can turn out to be useful for your self-development and mental health. Overall, travelling is one of the best ways to find your route to yourself and your inner world.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The card said that he weighed 70kg. The couple was surprised as their suitcases weighed the same. The wife said: "Can you imagine, dear, some unimportant things weigh as much as you do?". The man answered: "Yes, my love, 70kg may contain nothing essential as well as the person..". They understood the increasing of the material things' influence and decided to go to the holiday without suitcases to stay face-to-face with each other and their thoughts.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

A man was walking in the park, when he saw some beautiful flowers. He decided that a bench of flowers may be an amazing present for his wife. He looked around and didn't notice anybody who could stop him from stealing those pretty flowers. He went across the grass field and finally reached them. He picked some flowers and tried to escape. Suddenly, a policeman noticed him as he seemed quite strange, giving some fast and frightened glances around. The policeman understood that the man stole those flowers and, therefore, commited a crime. He took the flowers from that man and let him go..

After a while, at the end of his working day the policeman went home, intended to surprise his wife by giving her the beautiful bench of flowers, stolen by that man in the park. It turned out that the person who had to control the citizens' behaviour, couldn't control himself and didn't hesitate to give the stolen flowers to his dearest wife. As the saying goes: "Honesty is the best policy", but few of people follow this golden rule.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

(1). Prince of Wales

(2). Jim Crow laws

(1). Prince of Wales

In British culture, the title "Prince of Wales" is given to the heir of the throne. It means that the person who holds this title is the next to be a king or queen of the UK. This title has been used in the royal family for centuries.

(2). Jim Crow laws

In American culture, "Jim Crow Laws" were a series of laws that enforced the racial segregation in the southern part of the US in the 19-20 centuries. These laws discriminated the African Americans by enforcing different facilities for black and white people (transport, schools etc.). These laws were abolished, but they reflected the deep racism and the hatred that existed between white and black people.
