I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The text reflects on the integral relationship between museums and their architecture, emphasizing that the design of museum buildings often symbolizes the institution's mission and identity more profoundly than the collections they possess. For instance, I.M. Pei's glass pyramid at Louvre becomes a more recognizable symbol than even the most famous of the museum's artworks, like the Mona Lisa. Museums are presented as architectural embodiments of culture, serving both as physical containers for art and historical objects, and as spaces that facilitate a deeper engagement with human creativity across time and cultures.

What's more, by invoking Michel Foucault's concept of "heterotopias",the text suggests museums offer unique environments that are both part of and separate from the external world, enabling visitors to interact with different realms of human experience, hightlighting the museum's role as a pivotal intersection between architecture, history, and cultural identity.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

Robert Maisel's assertion in "Transform Through Trave: Connecting Across Cultures" that travel connects individuals with their identity delves into the profound journey of self-discovery that often accompanies exploration of new environments and cultures. Travel, by its very nature, strips away the familiar context in which one's personality is usually anchored, compelling travelers to confront and engage with their core selves in the absence of their usuual social roles and routines. This disconnection from the familiar offers a unique mirror, reflecting one's true desires, fears, strengths, and weaknesses.

The process of navigating unfamiliar territories and interacting with diverse cultures challenges biased notions and broadens one's perspective, nurturing introspection. Such experiences provide a backdrop against which individuals can reconsider their values, beliefs, and life choices. The challenges and surprises encountered on the road serve as catalysts for personal growth, pushing individuals out of their comfort zones and encouraging them to discover latent aspects of their personalities.
Maisel's insight highlights the transformative power of travel as a means of forging a deeper connection with oneself. It suggests that through the act of exploring the world, individuals embark on a parallel inner journey, where the lessons learned and the reflections provided by new experiences contribute to a more complex understanding of oneself. This dual exploration enhances self-awareness and can lead to significant persona; development.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The wife read the card aloud, "Unexpected wealth is coming your way." They laughed it off, but as they boarded the train, the man's phone buzzed with a notification. He had won a small fortune in a competition he'd entered months ago and forgotten about. Speechless, they looked at each other, then back at the fortune card, realizing their holiday had just become the start of something even more exciting. The man decided to take the opportunity and brought a boat of his dreams. A little seaside trip has turned their life around.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

As an aspiring barber, Mark was both nervous and excited to have his first client sit in his chair. The man wanted a simple haircut, but Mark was determined to give him the best haircut of his life. After a long struggle and many deep breaths, Mark finally finished and the client was thrilled with the results.

Right after the satisfied customer left, he mentioned that his twin brother should come in for a haircut as well. Mark felt a surge of pride and relief knowing that his hard work had paid off. However, as Mark was cleaning up the salon, he looked up to see a new client walking in. To his shock, the man looked exactly like the first client. Mark's heart raced as he realized his next challenge was to recreate the same amazing haircut on the identical twin. With determination and skill. Mark managed to give the new client an identical haircut, impressing him just as much as the first. From then on, the tin brothers became regular clients, thanks to Mark's talent and attention to detail.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

1). Elevenses

2). Electoral College

1). Elevenses

Elevenses is a term that originated in British culture and referes to a light snack of refreshment tipically taken around 11 o'clock in the morning, around the time when people start to feel hungry but it's not quite time for lunch. It is a tradition in British culture to have a cup of tea or coffee with a small snack during elevenses, such as biscuit or pasteries. This practice is emblematic of the British lifestyle, emphasizing the importance of taking regular breaks for tea and snacks, such as cakes or sandwiches. It reflects not only the cultural significance of tea in the UK but also the rhythm of daily life that accommodates moments of rest and social engagement amidst work or daily activities.

2). Electoral College

The Electoral College is a constitutional mechanism in the US designed for the inderect election of the President and Vice President. In this system, each state is assigned a certain number of electors based on the state's representation in Congress. These electors then cast theis votes for the presidential and vice-presidential candidates based on the popular vote in their state.This system has both supporters who argue for its fairness and detractors who advocate for its reform or abolition. This system aims to balance influence of states with large populations against those with smaller populations, ensuring that every state has a voice in presidential election.
