I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

Contraversial though this topic may be, I believe there are solutions that can be found to make the most of the digital revolution and at the same time prevent physical museums from losing their significance.

The internet has become the most popular source of socializing, therefore, completely restricting the use of the modern devices would be clearly unproductive. What's needed is the middle ground. For instance, it would be worth publishing the most relevant and bright pieces of an exhibition to give potential visitors an overview of what they can observe. Another option is to have some events held online and some of them in a traditional form.

Summing up, I can say that implementation of technology into our lives is innevitable and we must seek ways to find a balance between the old and new ways. Recommendations above suggest possible ways of keeping up with the cutting-edge technological developments and preserving the importance of physical museums as well.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

Since time immemorial humans have been inclined to explore the world and its wonders. Yet, the discoveries were not the only agenda that attracted them - it was also a gut feeling, telling them they should see for themselves what life on the other side of the planet was like. In other words, travelling has been our innate desire to gain new experience and find out more about the world and ourselves. 81

They say "a change is as good as rest", and what can be better than a change of the surroundings? Travel enables a person to make a shift in their mind regarding their previous beliefs, while also broadening their horizons. Having immersed yourself in a different setting and culture, you may as well start to appreciate everything that you have as you'll start to look at things from a different perspective. Most importantly, it gives you the clarity of your life purpose and goals.

Finally, I can conclude that travel can not only help "connect you with yourslef" but it may also be the key factor in reconsidering your life goals. It is extremely beneficial for your personal growth as it increases your self-awareness and consciousness. After all, why not get the best of the both worlds by having some rest from your hectic lifestyle and investing some time in yourself?

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

'Well, that's just because there is no answer to that question! My son is very keen on Napoleon's life and considers him his role model. My son believes, Napoleon can never die for he will always remain in the hearts of his followers and those who truly value his contribution to the world of history,' shortly exclaimed Jack's father.' 'Hmm. Okay. If your son is as interested in Napoleon's life as you claim him to be, I suppose he does deserve a second chance,'mercifully cocnluded professor.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

There once was an intricately designed goblet. It looked very posh and luxirious, yet, there was more to it than met the eye. Something mysteriously odd would happen to the people, who first bought it.

Mrs. Smith was an old lonely woman and it was only her beloved neigbours she had in the entire world. Once she decided to give them a goblet, which had been passed through the generations in her family. The neighbours were a couple and gladly welcomed such a beautiful present. However, shortly after receiving it, the couple realised there was something wrong about it. The goblet would suck out all the happiness and leave them unhappy. They decided to give it to the first man willing to take it.

Getting rid of it gave the couple a new lease of life and they were now assured they had done the right thing. In the meanwhile, the goblet was passed from one person to the other as people also felt that it would bring some macabre feelings to them. Finally, one man decided to sell the goblet to the owner of the vintage shop. One evening, Mrs. Smith was passing by that shop and suddenly saw a familiar object.

'Oh, my darlings, I figured it had been stolen from you! Here you are, I found it in a vintage shop. Make sure you don't lose it again!' the old woman said to her neighbours, having left them in horror.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

(1). Prince of Wales

(2). Jim Crow laws

(1). Prince of Wales
Prince of Wales is a title given to the potential heir to the British throne, usually held by the child of a king or queen. Subsequently, when the time comes, Prince of Wales is to become the king of the United Kingdom.

(2). Jim Crow laws
Jim Crow laws appeared during the period in American histroy known as the Reconstruction. It's a period that took place after the Civil War and implied that black people (former slaves) did not deserve to be equally recongnised by the public as the white people did, therefore, leading to a series of laws restricting the blacks from using the same facilities (schools, restrooms, hospitals, water fountains, etc.) as the whites just becauce some of their former owners could not come to terms with the idea that those people were no longer slaves and had as many rights as they did. This term can often be referred to as Jim Crow Segregation for, indeed, in their essence, these laws were the epitomy of segregation and remained present in the American culture until the 20th century.
