I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

Even though museums are becoming less and less of any interest to the modern public whose attention spans are shorter than ever before due to their daily use of digital media, the museums refuse to give up and learn how to fight fire with fire. Instead of banning phones on the premises, they permit them and let people take pictures of any exhibit they like. Instead of doing everything the old way, they embrace societal changes and adapt to them. It was previously assumed that museum would be a remnant of the past now that everybody has a phone and can look just about anything up in a matter of seconds, but as it turns out, people do still want to experience things in person and not through the screens of their devices.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

It is common knowledge that travel is good for you. It can work wonders for your mental health, it can help you broaden your horizons, meet new people, explore new cultures and customs as well as simply enjoy yourself. But the actual benefits of travelling go far beyond that. In my opinion, Robert Maisel said it best, "Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself."

When you travel, you plunge into a whirlpool of events that are profoundly influential when it comes to your worldview. It is when you discover different ways of life that you stop to question the values that you internalised as a child. When travelling, you are no longer sure that you know right from wrong. You start to realise that we draw that line very arbitrarily. By looking at other cultures and the rules by which they live, you compare them with yours and get to choose whether to still accept them or discard them based on your new experiences. It is in times like these that your true self is revealed to you, that you gain an understanding of what is best for you.

Nothing like travel can make you get closer to yourself.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The card read that the train the man and his wife were going to get on would crash. The wife didn't take it seriously. She grinned and put it in a trash can. But the got scared like he saw a ghost. He was known to be a worrywart but he outdid himself this time. He tore the train tickets apart, grabbed his wife by the hand and ran away with her like his life depended on it. Some people don't understand any jokes.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

It was a sunny day in May. The tulips were in full bloom. A man was taking a stroll through a park. There were tulips all over the place, but it was still against the law to pluck them. The sneaky man was well aware of the fact but he decided to take his chances and get some tulips while no one was looking. Much to his chagrin, he met a police officer who took the bouqet from him and gave him a fine on his way home. The petty lawbreaker was in low spirits because he almost got away with it. The officer smelled the flowers with a big grin on his face and thought to himself, "Well, I can't plant these back. Be a shame if I got rid of them. I might as well brighten my wife's day with them." So he went home and gave them to his wife.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
