I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

According to the text, the digital revolution has had a profound impact on the way modern museums operate. Additionally, the advent of new technologies has created new opportunities for making digital art, namely apps, which require new guidelines in order to be incorporated into museum experiences.

There are also mixed opinions about whether the introduction of digital technology is going to harm the popularity of traditional museums, but the author states that, so far, people are actually becoming more interested in the unique experiences these institutions offer.

Personally, I agree with the author, indeed, the digital revolution has paved the way for increasing the influence of museums and can greatly benefit them in that department. Nevertheless, it is important to consider that smartphone technologies have also impacted the standards of entertainment and education. In this day and age people expect them to be more exciting and straightforward, and modern museums will have to adapt to these changes.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

I believe this quote perfectly encapsulates the role of travel as an integral part of humans as a species and a key to a person's character development and well-being.

Indeed, traveling, be it an ordinary walk in your local forest or a trek through the Sahara desert, often means facing up to certain challenges and sometimes even throwing yourself into certain danger. These experiences are often transformative and can help a person discover what they are like outside of their comfort zone and see what their true values are. No matter how small or insignificant your experiences may seem, they are always an opportunity for your character traits to shine, and for you to impact the world, making you more aware of yourself.

But even if you don't find yourself a changed person after a business trip to another city or a vacation far away from home, you are still bound to make memories, and because of that you will certainly feel like a living person with things to tell and wisdom to share, and not just a mindless husk, bound by chains of routine.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

'But my wife and I have been saving up for years to send him to this university!'

'I understand your worries, but I can't let such a lazy student pass just for a promise to "improve a lot next year"'

'You wouldn't do this just for a promise you say? What about this?", Jack's father produced $1000 dollars in cash from his suit pocket.

'Who are you taking me for? You think I would take a bribe just to let your good-for-nothing son pass? Get out!'

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

"Good morning, sir!" said Mr. Brabant, "I need a haircut"

"Right this way sir, we will get right on it", said the hairdresser.

The hairdresser has never seen so much hair on a man's head before. He put a piece of cloth on his client's shoulders and started cutting. Hair by hair, Mr. Brabant started looking less and less like a homeless man with a hedgehog on his head. And After all the grooming, cutting and brushing, it was done.

"Goodness gracious! I have never looked so handsome before! My hair grows very quickly, you see, and it's really hard for me to get it looking good", said Mr. Brabant as he left the establishment.

Outside he met with his twin brother, Joey Brabant.

'I can't believe my eyes! Freddy, is that you?'

'I knew you would like it, Joey. You look just as unkempt as I used to, you should try this hairdresser out!"

And so, Joey entered the building. But before he could say a word, the hairdresser, shocked at his sight, exclaimed "your hair grows that quickly!?"

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
