I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

Museum surely is different world. Where else could you see marble greek statues neighboring modern paintings or classical pieces bordering abstractionism? But the thing is not just that museums show you objects of different times and places.

The thing is that museums serve no other purpose but to show you art pieces - the culture itself. In architecture this beauty serves a practical purpose - every day you can walk past the beautiful facades and you enjoy them: while walking, talking... Just like the music in the elevator, which helps to easy the silence, architecture is swarmed by the other buildings and by the street itself. Museums, on the other hand, are made just so you can look at those art pieces - just look and nothing else. That's what makes them different.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

They say, travelling always makes you a better person. New faces, new traditions, new ways of life - isn't it a cure for any vice that a man can have?

It's not.

Although it's been often said that by having a look at other cultures you can better understand yours, the real effect of travelling is highly debatable. The arguments for the positive effects of travelling are such as 'exploring new cultures', 'seeing other ways of thinking' and 'getting rid of the culture-centered worldview'.

Secondly, for obvious reasons we can't see the real life in these countries, only a facade for tourists. Often we don't know the language, don't know where to go and our experience with the country's culture becomes non-authentic. So only those, who seek, will find what they're looking for.

However, every year thousands of our tourists fly to such countries as Turkey or Emirates. Have they changed? I don't think so.... That is because in our globalized world where every country is similar to another it's nearly impossible to encounter different culture. We often travel for the relaxation, not exploration, so it's about us and not the travelling.

So, if you want to see the bigger picture, if you're willing to explore the world, travelling will surely make you better. And if you don't... There's nothing anything can do. As Kipling said, "Yours is the Earth and everything within it" - so go on, shift the boundaries, break the mold and travel - the brave new world awaits.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The ticket said: 'To print your weight and fortune insert another penny in'. The man was amused but eventually put in another penny. After passing the second ticket to his wife, he sat on the bench, ready for everything, but the ticket said: 'System error. Insert 2 more pennies to continue'. In anger the man gave 10 pennies to the machine. It made an awful loud sound, beeped - and broke completely.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

Their relationship was rapidly collapsing - he spent most of the day at his pathetic nine-to-five job and then, coming back to his little flat in the evening, he tried his best not to see all the signs of his wife cheating.

He loved her truly and blamed it on himself; he loved her and wanted to prove it - for the first time in his meaningless life - he made his own choice. He rushed across the park, got to these charming, amazing flowers and (his entity was trembling) took them away.

Away? He knew, he wasn't gonna get away with this. A huge redneck in a black uniform whistled from behind. So he stopped. And he bowed his head. And the whole world around him has turned into poor man's tears.

The policeman took these flowers and charged the man with a fine he couldn't afford.

After that, the redneck drove away with all the flowers and gave them to a beautiful lady he adored. Oh, how she was glad with it! She confessed her love and they were kissing and playing until the dusk. Then her husband walked in, trying his best not to notice his wife cheating. He came back with one flower that the policeman forgot to take away.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.
