I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The author is describing the role of the museum buildings. He emphasises the two major points of view. First of all, a building can be even more renowned than a collection itself, as it summarises the works of art contained and represents their main ideas. What is more, it outlines a border between the outer world and a unique assemblage of various objects, which is of utmost significance. Finally, museums can be definitely called a unique place that gives us the opportunity to become fully immersed in different epochs and see astonishing evidences of human creativity with our own eyes. Museums combine "both real and unreal", giving us a clear understanding of how people were developing throughout the world's history.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Robert Maisel once wrote: "Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life". In my opinion, this statement means that when people visit foreign countries, they fully experience the variety of different cultures and traditions. Traveling changes the whole perception of the reality by broadening our horizons and letting us understand that life is not restricted by one city and its rules.

For instance, many students, especially in Europe and the US, take a gap year after graduation in order to go abroad and see how people live there, what their mindset is, what professions they prefer, and so on. What is more, they often see the discouraging reality of poor countries, which makes them embrace and appreciate daily things they already have.

Taking everything into consideration, it is my firm belief that traveling is essential for those who want to become aware of themselves, determine goals, and gain experience that will be useful throughout their whole lives. Our world is a wonderful place. I suppose that everybody should see its miracles -- these memories usually become truly valuable and help to become a broaden-minded person.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

However, the girl seemed not to turn a hair. The young man was astonished: not only did she pay her own bill, but she also covered his expenses before he could say Jack Robinson! Suddenly, an old man appeared by their table. Tickled pink, the girl stood up and gave him a hug.

The man asked: "Well, how are you doing, my dear daughter? Did your friend enjoy our place?"

And then it finally dawned on the young man that he wanted to impress the girl with her own restaurant!

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

Once Mr. and Mrs. Smith arranged a party to celebrate their wedding anniversary. There were many guests, including Aunt Sara who was their neighbour and a good family friend; the only flaw she had was an awful memory. Aunt Sara came to the party with a gift -- an old vintage vase. Mrs. Smith was quite disappointed: "What are we gonna do with it? It doesn't suit our house's interior at all!" Her spouse promised to fix the situation, and soon the vase was sold to the local flower shop's owner. In fact, he found it rather cheap-looking right after the bargain. Therefore, the vase was handed over from one person to another, and finally ended up being bought by Aunt Sara again!

A few years later, on Mr. Smith's birthday party, Aunt Sara proudly presented the vase to the family. Surprised and frustrated, Smiths were absolutely sure that it was their neighbour's evil joke. However, they were wrong: the old lady simply forgot that the vase had ever been her property!

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress has millions items in over 125 languages and a myriad of formats. To provide access to this materials, a number of catalogs has been created on cards, in book-form, in micro-form, and in machine-reading form.

The Main Catalog, maintained for the public, and the Official Catalog, maintained for the stuff, provide an overview of the resources of the Library. The Old Catalog refers to the existing card catalogs for material cataloged through 1980. The New Catalog refers to the bibliographic file containing all post-1980 cataloging with the acception of certain cataloging data for material in non-Roman scripts.

The information explosion of the last 25 years has left major libraries no choice but to deal with the storage and accessing of information via new, more efficient methods. Not only it has become physically impossible to contain and house the yearly incoming flood of new books and manuscripts, but the acid contents of most paper manufactured in the 19th century is already crumbling entire libraries to dust. Consequently, attempts are currently being made to preserve information in less perishable and more compact form. The computerization of the Card Catalog is only the most visual aspect of a multi-million-dollars revolution in what the Library of Congress is and will become.
