I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The digital world has influenced artwork a lot. The dozens of new pieces of art are in an online form, which causes a setback for museums related to amount of visitors. From the first sight it looks that newest technologies don't help museums. However, from one hand, nowadays people's world is filled to the brim with online sites, full of distractions. Visiting museums in this case will help the to recharge their batteries, entering a calm world of impeccable pieces of art . Moreover, new technologies led a hand to museums in case of engaging more visitors.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

Travelling is a part and parcel of our lives. Everyone loves to spend their journey differently - lying on a beach or visiting actively historical places. One always remains unchanged - the realisation of the value of your hometown during being abroad.

The fact is that most of us consider certain opportunities in our countries as usual, normal things. For example, most people use online banks in our country, drawing out their money as fast as light. Russians usually don't have any idea about setbacks in banking systems in other countries before visiting these federations themselves. Such situations help people to realise the marvellous possibilities that our motherland gives us.

Furthermore, during visiting other countries people often struggle with the lack of their mother language there. Tourists don't have an opportunity to touch base with native speakers of foreign countries because of not knowing other languages. These kinds of situations are a great example for people to make a conclusion about the real value of their land, as an impeccable place where you can get easily connected with everyone.

Travelling brings people an invaluable experience - new knowledge about countries, new cousins and history. However, the most important experience is becoming grateful for life that you have in your birthplace.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

Jack's father couldn't believe his ears. On the spur of the moment he left the professor's room, entered a huge book store and bought there a bunch of works devoted to Napoleon's life. "You're going to remember his whole destiny by heart, so good luck!" he said angrily to his son. Jack didn't have a ghost of a chance to play truant this time, so he spent that sunny summer truing to learn the history.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

It was a sunny day in London. A man decided to go off the beaten track and went to work through some marvellous gardens.

Suddenly, he noticed some remarkable flowers, growing in someone's garden. He was thrilled by their riot of colors. This witty man was of two minds. From one hand, he was struggling with an astute desire to pick those flawless flowers. From the other hand, he wanted to save them. He was full to the brim with uncertainty. In a while, he picked these flowers finally and...

caught red-handed. A policeman was standing in front of the man. The thief was like a cat on hot bricks. It was a harrowing moment for him. It turned out that he had to pay a loan. He felt blue, while a policeman took the flowers and gave those impeccable ones to a woman, who the policeman fell in love with.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
