I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

Museums as the Essence of Architecture

It is hard to separate a museum from its building. When we think of a museum, we typically picture its building before any work contained within. I. M. Pei's glass pyramid is surely far more symbolic of the Louvre as an institution than even the Mona Lisa. The reason is that in most instances museum buildings are specifically designed both as containers for a museum's collection and as symbolic summations of their contents and of the mission, meaning and identity of the institution as a whole.

The idea of architecture goes back much further than the museum. Yet one of the most intriguing things about museum buildings is that despite the untold diversity of their forms, as a distinct type of building, they embody the idea of architecture at its most fundamental. If architecture is at its essence about enclosure and containment, of defining a distinction between inside and outside, and of ritualizing the transition between them, then museums constitute the very essence of architecture.

Walking into a museum is like stepping into different world. The basic rules of our own still apply, of course – we still have gravity and laws of the land are still enforced, in addition to the rules imposed by the museum itself. However, other aspects are quite different. Politics and the history of power relations are present and live, but the museum also exists somehow outside of them. We see materials – stone, metal or timber – made to do things of such intricacy and virtuosity that they seem to defy human ingenuity. We bear witness to the remains of creatures millions of years old, to works of art with the power to provoke us, and to objects from strange and distant cultures seemingly unconnected to our own, yet united by the bond of human creativity and empathy that extends across millennia. And most profoundly, the museum is a space where these objects exist side-by-side, where the normal rules of time and space are temporarily suspended. Museums are quite different to the outside world; they are the archetypal example of what the French philosopher Michel Foucault termed a 'heterotopia' – a space that is both real and unreal, that mirrors the world in microcosm – which the museum establishes by bringing and juxtaposing objects from different times and places and presenting them as totality and with a reverence that borders on the sacred.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The text can be divided into 3 parts: thesis, subtext and context. The main idea is that museums are carefully designed edifices representative of their exhibits. After presenting the subject topic the author expresses his opinion on how museums correlate with architecture on the whole, which is subtext, since it delves into the concept, broadens the range of information. He goes on to tell the reader that architecture creates an integrity of the appearance and the content of a building, which is especially characteristic of museums. Finally, he extends on his understanding of museums beyond their buildings, which is, in relation to the overall theme, the context, as it revolves around the same subject but in a different direction. In short, the extract suggests that museums are parallel universes where space- and time-travelling is possible. In conclusion, the text is well-balanced and introduces the idea in its depth, guiding us through 3 layers of the concept.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

The proverbial saying goes, 'Variety is the spice of life.' How can we enliven our lives with new experiences? The surest way is through travelling, undoubtedly.

However, what do we gain from changing locations beyond pleasure? We also get to see how other people live and it never fails to make an impression on us. Wandering along the streets of Hollywood will certainly make you green with envy. Discovering most places has the opposite effect, though. Why is that?

People who can afford plane or even train tickets and accommodation abroad are typically privileged. At any rate, the basics, such as healthy food, drinkable water and medication, are always available to them. It's a whole different ball game in a number of countries and you don't even need to travel to the back of beyond to witness the deprivation.

When you stay at any hotel, no matter where, the bulk of its staff, the cleaning personnel, for instance, tends to be foreign. Nine times out of ten hotel employees come from developing countries. It doesn't take much thinking to realise how lucky and affluent you are compared to people who are compelled to emigrate in search of work.

Travel does make you appreciate your wealth and status. It allows you to see the broader picture, however unpleasant it might be. That's my perspective on the above-mentioned statement.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

'Do you know how many Napoleons there were on the thrown?' the concerned parent wondered. In his many years of practice the lecturer had only covered Napoleon I's biography. It had never occurred to him that the slacker might have been talking about the notorious leader's successor. 'Fine, he'll have his last chance of retaking the exam. If he lets it slip through his fingers, then I won't be at fault.' the teacher growled ominously. To everyone's surprise, this time with the guidance of his witty and sage father, the lazybones sailed through the exam effortlessly.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

That lovely day was the birthday of Jim's wife. The man so desperately wanted to make her happy that he stoped at a flower bed in a park on his way home to make a bouquet for his beloved spouse.

Having made sure that the gardener was out of sight and there was no one to be seen in the vicinity, he crept towards the manicured lawn, picked a bunch of flowers and beat a retreat. 'My mission is accomplished!' Jim exclaimed under his breath, his normally sallow face blushing.

At that exact moment, he encountered a policeman, who glared at the poor thing menacingly. Jim tried to leg it, however the stocky man pulled him closer, almost ripping the collar of his jacket. Needless to say, the guardian of the law handed out a fine to Jim and confiscated the wretched present.

It's what happened next that surprises me. Hardly had the perpetrator disappeared when the officer lifted the bouquet to his face. He was smitten by the intoxicating smell. 'It's of no use to the hooligan, why should I throw it away?' he wondered. So, he didn't. The flowers' final destination was the vase of his exuberant sister.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

1). Elevenses

2). Electoral College

1). Elevenses

It's a part of British working culture. It's the name of a break employees, typically white-collars, make at 11 o'clock to have a cup of tea or a snack, for example some scones. Many people consider elevenses to be a separate meal.

2). Electoral College

It's a part of American educational system. American children start school at the age of 6, they study for 12 years divided into 3 obligatory stages (elementary, middle, high), and then some high-school graduates enter electoral colleges, which are somewhat like private universities. You have to pass certain exams to enter college, because they are student-selective. At some colleges a degree only takes 2 years.
