I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. Breaking Down Barriers to Entry

The first and oldest of the three characteristics that define a museum is its collection; there is simply no museum without a collection. Yet the ways we typically understand a museum's collection is, and has always been, heavily weighted towards the objects themselves, rather than the arguably equally important series of decisions that determined how that collection was brought together. Moreover when we visit a museum we rarely see more than a tiny percentage of the objects in its collection. Again, the decisions about what to display and what to keep in storage are seldom acknowledged.

The second key characteristic of the museum is that the collection should be accessible to the public. However, that a collection is open to the public does not automatically mean those who visit are representative of the public. Museum audiences typically skew towards better-educated and more affluent demographics. Free entry is no panacea. Cost is just one barrier to entry, and, while important, may not actually be the biggest one. Social and cultural barriers can be just as strong. Despite some of their best efforts, museums are frequently perceived as elitist and unwelcoming – especially when housed in grand classical edifices as so many still are. Just as a museum cannot consider itself to be a truly public institution unless its staff's demographic makeup reflects the public at large, the same can be said of its audience. Museums cannot be properly public institutions unless they can reach and connect with everyone. Many museums are making huge and consistent efforts to do this, but what is required is perhaps something more profound. Rather than defining themselves as existing somehow beyond the quotidian realities of daily life, museums need to find ways to dissolve the boundaries that exist between them and the outside world – its identities, cultures, politics and everyday realities. Museums have already begun to look to the digital sphere which, as we have already seen, offers a range of new and transformative possibilities of connecting to, and engaging with, a much broader public.

This takes us to the third and final fundamental characteristic of the museum: that it is housed in a building which acts as both container and symbol of the museum's collection and broader mission. This twin function has always been part of the concept of a museum.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The given extract elaborates on three fundamental characteristics of any museum. Firstly, it states that collections displayed in museums steal the spotlight from the series of decisions made to devise such collections. Indeed, few people think about the hard work put into creating expositions. However, the collection itself carries more cultural value than the actions of its creators, so the inequal attention devoted to these objects is justified. Secondly, the author writes that museums are not doing enough to grant their accessibility to everyone. This statement could be proven wrong, as the given recommendations to enhance the accessibility are already followed by many museums. For instance, digital expositions and performances became a common sight more than five years ago. Lastly yet importantly, the museums' buildings are stated to be as valuable as their content. I agree with this point of view, as all museums' buildings carry historical or artistic value.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

Traveling plays a big role in our life. With technological advancement, it became accessible to the majority of the population. How exactly does it affect our life and mindset?
Robert Maisel once said, "Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself." In my opinion, this statement is true. While visiting other cities, countries or even continents, you get acquainted with different cultures, customs, people. It broadens your mind, allowing you to self-reflect and thus find inner peace. Also, the change of surrounings positively contributes to one's physical and mental state. By traveling, you avoid stagnation. The aforementioned aspects of travel let people see themselves from a variety of perspectives and find more about their personality.
For instance, the plotline of a famous novel "Robinson Crusoe" by Daniel Defoe revolves around a man stranded on a deserted island. Although this travel in particular is not voluntary, the main character steadily recovers and gets used to new circumstances. During his stay on the island, he discovers the wonders of unspoilt nature, makes new friends and learns the basics of wild life. After spending over a year alone, his journals indicate his growth and even state that he finally found himself.
In conclusion, I agree with the given quotation. Travel helps people learn more about themselves through new experience, acquaintances and the change of surroundings.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

He turned to the girl. "So, did you like our date?" he asked, inwardly calculating ways to flee the scene without paying. He quickly created a plan involving his friends staging a robbery, during which he will courageously defend the girl and save the day. "It was wonderful! Let's go home, shall we?" the girl smiled and grabbed his hand. The man sheepishly asked her, "Wait, don't we have to pay?" His girlfriend looked at him, clearly amused, and said, "Don't worry. My husband will pay for everything."

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

It had been a great evening until Laura's mother-in-law came. Laura hated the days her husband's mother would unexpectedely visit them, always carrying an atrocious gift. That day it was a century-old vase. Its black marble ruined Laura's house interior. Moreover, nobody could even drink from it, as it was so heavy! Laura's husband, Claus, proposed a solution. The day after, he gifted the vase to his boss Winston. No one in the company liked that man, so when Claus brought the hideous vase to work, everyone burst out laughing. The boss was reluctant to accept the present, but after a quick discussion with his co-worker, he took the vase and handed it to his bodyguard. The latter looked at the horrifying object indignantly and rushed to the nearest antique store. The vase was sold for only one dollar. After hearing the story, Laura let out a sigh of relief. Suddenly, she heard a knock on the front door. After opening it, Laura was on the verge of tears. Her mother-in-law bought the same vase from that store!

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

1). The Order of the Thistle

2). Swing states

1). The Order of the Thistle

Thistle is the symbol of Scotland. The Order of the Thistle is a Scottish political organisation, which deals with legislation and social matters.

2). Swing states
During general election in the US, states get divided into Republican and Democrate ones. However, there is a percentage of states which change their opinion every year. These states are called the swing states or purple states. American politicians are always eager to persuade these swing states into voting for them, as these swing states have a great impact on the final results of the election
