I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. Breaking Down Barriers to Entry

The first and oldest of the three characteristics that define a museum is its collection; there is simply no museum without a collection. Yet the ways we typically understand a museum's collection is, and has always been, heavily weighted towards the objects themselves, rather than the arguably equally important series of decisions that determined how that collection was brought together. Moreover when we visit a museum we rarely see more than a tiny percentage of the objects in its collection. Again, the decisions about what to display and what to keep in storage are seldom acknowledged.

The second key characteristic of the museum is that the collection should be accessible to the public. However, that a collection is open to the public does not automatically mean those who visit are representative of the public. Museum audiences typically skew towards better-educated and more affluent demographics. Free entry is no panacea. Cost is just one barrier to entry, and, while important, may not actually be the biggest one. Social and cultural barriers can be just as strong. Despite some of their best efforts, museums are frequently perceived as elitist and unwelcoming – especially when housed in grand classical edifices as so many still are. Just as a museum cannot consider itself to be a truly public institution unless its staff's demographic makeup reflects the public at large, the same can be said of its audience. Museums cannot be properly public institutions unless they can reach and connect with everyone. Many museums are making huge and consistent efforts to do this, but what is required is perhaps something more profound. Rather than defining themselves as existing somehow beyond the quotidian realities of daily life, museums need to find ways to dissolve the boundaries that exist between them and the outside world – its identities, cultures, politics and everyday realities. Museums have already begun to look to the digital sphere which, as we have already seen, offers a range of new and transformative possibilities of connecting to, and engaging with, a much broader public.

This takes us to the third and final fundamental characteristic of the museum: that it is housed in a building which acts as both container and symbol of the museum's collection and broader mission. This twin function has always been part of the concept of a museum.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The extract underscores the evolving role of museums in breaking down barriers to entry. Author highlights that a museum's collection is not just about the objects but also the decisions behind them, often overlooked. Additionally, the article emphasizes the need for museums to ensure accessibility to diverse demographic groups, addressing not only financial barriers but also social and cultural ones. Museums must reflect the diversity of their audiences and dissolve all perceptions. There are come efforts to engage digitally recognized, but yet a more profound shift is needed, such as breaking down boundaries between museums and the world, so museums can become more inclusive. Finally, Hopkins reaffirms the dual role of museum buildings as both container and a symbol of collection. Overall, extract stimulates museums to become truly public institutions by embracing connectivity beyond traditional limits.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

Travelling can indeed foster gratitude by exposing individuals to diverse cultures, lifestyles and perspectives. When we witness different ways of living, encounter kindness from strangers, or overcome challenges in unfamiliar environments abroad, we deepen our appreciation of what we have in our lives. Moreover, travelling often forces to step out of comfort zones, which can lead to personal growth and helps to understand how the world works.

Additionally, travel allows us to connect with nature and it's beauty. Such opportunity can inspire a true sense of gratitude for the Earth's wonders and a commitment to preserving them for future generations.

Overall, travelling broadens our perspectives, fosters empathy and reminds us of the richness and fragility of life, instilling a sense of gratitude for the world and all its inhabitants.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

Jack's father persisted, despite the professors' initial refusal. He convinced the professor to give Jack a second chance and promised to support his son's studies and help him to improve. Finally, the professor agreed. Encouraged by his father's faith, Jack dedicated all his time to studies and a year later returned to the professor's office. This time, when Jack was asked about historical dates, he confidently answered all questions, impressing both his professor and his father.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

Once upon a time, while walking around in the park, Mark found a gorgeous round flower bed. That afternoon, unable to resist the beauty of vibrant tulips, he looked around carefully and plucked a handful of flowers to brighten his apartment.

However, despite the fact that he tried to hide the flowers under the jacket, his act didn't go unnoticed. He was caught by a fair policeman and had shortly been given a fine for this. The policeman reminded him of the rules regarding public property and the importance of respecting city facilities. Mark was very upset and tried to plead his case, explaining his pure love for a touch of nature.

Moved by Mark's explanation, the vigilant policeman decided to take a different approach. He took the flowers from Mark's hand and went to give them to the woman from the house in front of the park. Surprised by unexpected gift, she explained the policeman that she had been feeling lonely lately and the flowers brought happiness to her boring day. The policeman felt a sense of fulfillment as he turned a woman's day into a positive one, all with a simple bouquet of flowers.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
