I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The author of the extract dwells on the fact that modern people tend to focus more on the digital aspect of life and that they don't live in the moment. When seeing something "moderately famous" they immediately take their phones and capture the surroundings without actually enjoying them. However, Owen Hopkins also states that the increase of media-saturation motivates people to look for something real and physical.

Of course the modern world is very digital. Post-covid, everything can be done online: we "facetime" our friends who live just a block away, we have online medical appointments, and yes, we visit museums via our gadgets. And it's hard to say whether it's a bad thing or not. Maybe the society needs to experience this "digital illness" to come to its senses and acknowledge the importance of doing things in the moment and capturing them with their memory rather than constantly taking photos.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Why people travel? The most common and I would say obvious reasons are to relax, unwind, make a change of the scenery and experience new things. And while people don't realise the impact of travel on their perception of life, it is actually astonishing. Let's look at some examples. If 200-300 years ago a man lived in a small american village in the middle of nowhere, what were his chances to travel around the world? i'd say 0. And what would be that man's reaction if he saw a person of a different race than his? Well, i think we all know the answer to this question. But nowadays it is completely different. Firstly, the vast majority of people has a chance to travel around the globe, no matter where they live. They are able to meet different people and accept them regardless of their race, appearance and other characteristics. They are given a unique chance to explore other cultures and expand their knowledge and understanding of the world.

Furthermore, people who travel are able to appreciate their life and everything that had been given to them by God.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

He had no idea how to pay a bill of 700 dollars when he only had 150 in his wallet. The poor fella had no choice but to confess to his girlfriend. She was stunned at first but then she came up with a brilliant idea. She quickly took a ring off her finger and slipped it into the man's hand. "Get on one knee! Trust me it will work!",- she said. The man did was he was told. He proposed to the girl and she said yes. One of the film stars that was also dining there was so happy for the couple that he paid their bill.

The couple got married a week later and lived happily for 50 years.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

One day a man named Jack was walking across a park when he noticed a garden of beautiful tulips. He admired them for a second and decided to pick a few for his wife. Jack knew that it was prohibited to do so but he also knew that this would make his Lucy very happy. Of course he could have bought them at a flowers market but he was too scrumptious to pay 20 dollars for something that he could get for free right this second . He picked the best boutons and soon he had a quintessential bouquet. Jack tried to be discreet but despite his best efforts a policeman noticed him. The petty thief tried to run away because the thought of having to pay a fine sent shivers down his spine. Unfortunately the officer was very experienced in catching flower thieves so he stopped him without any trouble. The bouquet was immediately taken away from Jack and the poor fella was left with a big fine of 500 dollars.

The policeman, however, was left with no choice but to gift these flowers to his beloved wife.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
