I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. Breaking Down Barriers to Entry

The first and oldest of the three characteristics that define a museum is its collection; there is simply no museum without a collection. Yet the ways we typically understand a museum's collection is, and has always been, heavily weighted towards the objects themselves, rather than the arguably equally important series of decisions that determined how that collection was brought together. Moreover when we visit a museum we rarely see more than a tiny percentage of the objects in its collection. Again, the decisions about what to display and what to keep in storage are seldom acknowledged.

The second key characteristic of the museum is that the collection should be accessible to the public. However, that a collection is open to the public does not automatically mean those who visit are representative of the public. Museum audiences typically skew towards better-educated and more affluent demographics. Free entry is no panacea. Cost is just one barrier to entry, and, while important, may not actually be the biggest one. Social and cultural barriers can be just as strong. Despite some of their best efforts, museums are frequently perceived as elitist and unwelcoming – especially when housed in grand classical edifices as so many still are. Just as a museum cannot consider itself to be a truly public institution unless its staff's demographic makeup reflects the public at large, the same can be said of its audience. Museums cannot be properly public institutions unless they can reach and connect with everyone. Many museums are making huge and consistent efforts to do this, but what is required is perhaps something more profound. Rather than defining themselves as existing somehow beyond the quotidian realities of daily life, museums need to find ways to dissolve the boundaries that exist between them and the outside world – its identities, cultures, politics and everyday realities. Museums have already begun to look to the digital sphere which, as we have already seen, offers a range of new and transformative possibilities of connecting to, and engaging with, a much broader public.

This takes us to the third and final fundamental characteristic of the museum: that it is housed in a building which acts as both container and symbol of the museum's collection and broader mission. This twin function has always been part of the concept of a museum.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The given text by Owen Hopkins describes the defining characteristics of a museum. Those are the museum's collection, its accessibility to the public and the building that houses the institution. Special attention is given to the accessibility of the collection, ensuring which goes beyond eliminating entrance fees, for sometimes people can be deterred from visiting a museum due to its highbrow image.

In my opinion, it is pivotal that museums try to make their identities more modern and appealing. In order to attract visitors, they should change the public perception of themselves. Nowadays, going to museums is mostly seen as something only interesting for the intellectual elite, whereas in reality every person can enjoy art and learn something new after visiting an exhibition.

Overall, I share the opinion of Owen Hopkins that museums should try to find a way to connect with a broader public.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

In his book "Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures," Robert Maisel expressed the idea that travelling prompts an individual to be more grateful. This notion suggests that travelling gives one an opportunity to experience something that makes them appreciate their daily life more. Since one's routine is made up of the little things they do every day, Maisel probably meant that travel highlights the pleasant yet difficult to spot parts of one's life.

Personally, I am inclined to agree with this statement. To begin with, travel is almost always filled with little inconveniences, such as an uncomfortable seat on a train, which inevitably makes one appreciate all creature comforts of their home that would otherwise be taken for granted. In addition, travel is what allows one to see the troubles people have in other places and so to understand that grass is actually never greener on the other side of the fence. Hence travellers must be more grateful for all they have at home. Last but not least, a person who can afford to travel must be grateful to their fortune for the opportunity per se.

All in all, in no way can it be denied that travel greatly adds to one's appreciation of their everyday life.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

Jack had gone to the university to study history, but at the end of his first year, his history professor failed him in his examinations, and he was told that he would have to leave the university. However, his father decided that he would go to see the professor to urge him to let Jack continue his studies the following year.

'He's a good boy,' said Jack's father, 'and if you let him pass this time, I'm sure he'll improve a lot next year and pass the examinations at the end of it really well.'

'No, no, that's quite impossible!' replied the professor immediately. 'Do you know, last month I asked him when Napoleon had died, and he didn't know!'

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

'But Jack's specialisation is Ancient History!' exclaimed Jack's father. 'You must acknowledge that knowing evert tiny detail is quite impossible, and I'm sure Jack is very knowledgeable about the ancient world!'

The professor remained silent for a minute, which gave Jack's father some hope.

'If Jack passes an Ancient History exam that I organise for him, he will be allowed to stay in the university,' finally said the professor.

Jack's father thanked him profusely and departed to tell the news to Jack.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

ALL MEN ARE THE SAME

It is a truth universally acknowledged that all women like to receive flowers. It is also undeniable that no man likes to spend a fortune on them.

One fine May day, having these two notions in mind, Mr Grey was taking a walk in the park when he eye lit on a flowerbed full of the most excellent tulips he had ever seen. A brilliant idea came to his mind instantly, and he sneakily picked an armful of flowers for Mrs Grey.

As luck would have it, he bumped into a tubby police officer on his way home. The officer duly fined Mr Grey and confiscated the flowers, thus leaving Mrs Grey without a bouquet. However, so beautiful were the flowers that the officer couldn't bear throwing them away. Besides, he had quarrelled with his wife earlier that day and called her a termagant, so he had to apologise.

Having made the decision, the police officer beamed. Without further delay, he hurried home to present his wife with the tulips.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.

VIII. Explain the meaning of the following words which reflect peculiarities of British / American cultures.

(1). Prince of Wales

(2). Jim Crow laws

(1). Prince of Wales

The Prince of Wales is the heir to the British throne. This title was first given to the heir of the English King in 1301 to symbolise the unification of England and Wales.

(2). Jim Crow laws

Jim Crow laws were created in the southern states of the USA over the course of one hundred years after the abolition of slavery in 1861. These laws enforced racial segregation with a view to keeping the black population in an inferior position.
