I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

Nowadays the digital revolution allows people all over the world to be highly educated and to get acquainted with different cultures by one tap on the screen, making it easier for those who strive for knowledge to satisfy their curiosity. At the same time, on the contrary, it becomes the source of doubts in the need of cultural objects like museums and galleries to exist as the economical expences that goes for their support can be unjustified or as it is just less complicated to work with digital apps.

However, I believe that museums and galleries should have place in life of every individual and remain physical. My point is that the atmosphere of a museum, the depth of understanding the work of art, the sense of connection with the work and the author is a unique experience, which is impossible to have by watching the pictures on a screen.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

Indeed, moving from country to country, learning about cultures of different peoples, observing foreigner's lives makes you more grateful as you face various experiences. In any hopeless and devastating situation that a tourist can find themselves during their journey there will be at least one local who will offer help and share a unique knowledge about their culture and country. This brings the feeling of great gratitude that you want to pass to others.

Moreover, continuous travelling makes one feel huge love and pride for their birthplace. In the end, you become homesick, starting to replay all the best memories from home in your head, you miss sence of belonging and come up with numerous thoughts on the topic of your mothercountry and wonder why you didn't appreciate that place. Eventually you develop gratefulness for being born exactly where you were and for always being able to return and enjoy your home.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The girl looked at the young man and gasped, covering her mouth: "You look like a ghost! Aren't you feeling well?" The man wanted to play cool and calm her down but then a wonderful idea came across his mind. He asked the waiter and frowned at him with his arms crossed, shouting that the staff here wanted to put him on a deathbed by ignoring his words about peanut allergy and adding peanuts to his food and now he feels and looks horrendous, which very much frightens his girlfriend. Although the waiter tried to solve the problem politely and quietly, the young man kept persuading everyone in the room that he is dying and the restaurant should be sued. Since the restaurant had to keep its good reputation and status the couple's bill was paid to compencate the man's "damage". Long story short, the young man impressed his girl but not in a way he wanted. She was so embarrassed by his attitude that hasn't talked to him ever since.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

On a day of the wedding when the guests were giving gifts to the married couple the bride's great grandma gave them a peculiar thing that didn't have a name or any particular purpose. The couple had no idea what to do with it so the groom came up with an idea of giving it to his best friend as a birthday present. THat friend was a gardener so he could use that thing as vase. At least that's what the groom thought. But the gardener wasn't very pleased by the new "vase" so that weirdly-shaped thing kept on going from hands to hands until it was sold to the shop with antique things, where that great grandma saw it and returned to the couple.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
