I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The digital revolution undoubtedly altered the way we percieve museums. For one thing, it appears that more and more people are loth to visit museums for the sake of gaining knowledge. Rather, they do it because they feel compelled by media and their role models to tick yet another box and to make a couple of photos of relics. This trend, if considered in isolation, definitely spells an educational disaster for future generations. For another thing, though, museums are catching up with modern trends and increasingly going online, too. Is that a positive trend? Yes! The trend denotes their desire to adapt and be flexible so as to meet general demands. People seem to like it, as was seen during the pandemic when many turned to online museums to dispell their ennui. What is more, online presence also enables museums to diffuse knowledge across the whole globe, which means the digital revolution actually helps people gain knowledge. All in all, the upsides of the digital revolution for museums seem to outweigh the downsides.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel has the ability to connect you with yourself.

Does travelling allow us to connect with ourselves? Absolutely.

Firstly, travelling holds many pleasant encounters for us, through which we can better understand ourselves. For instance, it is often the case that we observe how other people live and immediately take to some of their traditions and customs. What is more, we often go as far as to integrate those foreign practicies into our daily lives, even though they may appear totally incongruent with our character. This happens because we subconsciously seek out things that stand to meet our personal needs. Thus, it is fair to say that travelling opens up oportunities for us to explore and eventually meet our deep-seated needs.

Secondly, apart from holding pleasant suprises, travelling oftentimes entails hardships we have to surmount. Although disheartening and aggravating, problems we face during travelling can also allow us a glimpse into ourselves and teach us some valuable lessons. However, it is not the practical exprience of fixing a broken phone or dealing with a delayed flight that matters. Rather, it is the way we fare during those tricky situations and subsequent conclusions we draw that make a difference. Handling urgent issues while travelling can be a key to gaining much-revered self-awareness. Not only that, taking a cue from locals (yet again!) can be insightful in terms of gaining self-awareness and navigating stressful situations.

Finally, travelling simply allows some time for solitude and introspection that help us step out of the rat race and make sense of our place in the world, our values and our needs.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A young man had a new girl-friend, whom he wanted to impress, so he invited her to go to a world-famous restaurant with him one evening. They dined wonderfully and had numerous drinks; they danced until midnight, and there was a polished musical entertainment. The girl enjoyed the entire evening, and was suitably impressed by everything she saw, including several film stars.

Then the waiter brought the bill at the end of the evening, and when the young man saw how much he had to pay, he was so shocked by the total that he went as white as a sheet.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

Soon enough, the man quickly got the handle on his emotions and feigned absolute composure. He knew he could not pay because he did not have such means, so he decided to leave the girl alone and make her pay for the dinner. He excused himself and went off to a bar. Yet, once he was out of the girl's sight, he changed direction and hightailed it out of the restaurant. He left, nearly vanished without a trace. The girl awaited him for some time. Then, she realized the man was gone, so she paid for the dinner herself. She was absolutely comfortable with that. 'Another pretentious and superficial boy,' she uttered, leaving the restaurant.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

What is forbidden to one, is allowed to the other

Once, a middle-aged man, John, was strolling down an alley in an unexpectedly good mood. He spotted sublime flowers that really appealed to him. Never a lover of flowers, he was baffled by his sudden and seemingly irresistable urge to pick them. So, John surreptitiously looked around - he did not want to be seen by anybody as it would be such a shame. Luckily for him, no one was around him, and the whole alley seemed deserted. John, still surreptitiously yet extremely quickly, skulked towards the much-desired flowers. As soon as he reached them, he somewhat graspingly started to pick the flowers. He fashioned them into an ordely bunch and began to leave the scene of the crime when a police officer approached him. The latter was merciless to John: he got reprimanded and fined. The officer, enchanted by the beauty of the flowers, wanted to keep them to himself, too. At first, he hesitated, but soon he decided that flowers cannot be planted back, so he gifted them to his wife.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress was founded in 1800 for the use of either houses of Congress, the President and the Vice-President. In 1814 during the war with Great Britain the enemy soldiers marched into Washington, set fire on the Capitol and destroyed the Library of Congress. After the end of hostilities, the Congress set about to replace the collections on a far grander scale then the original one. In 1815 Jefferson's private library was bought and it was the foundation of a new Library of Congress – very different from one that has been burned. In 1840 it started a wide exchange program with many of libraries both at home and abroad. In 1897 the Library of Congress moved to its present premise.

The 19th century closed with a rise of professionalism in education, the proliferation of free public libraries, and the establishment of colleges and universities throughout the country. The resultant creations of libraries in every town and in every university campus called for organization and agreement on the science of librarianship. In a result, the American Library Association was established in 1876.
