I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. New Challenges

Unable to resist the digital tide, museums have begun to allow smartphones to be used in their galleries. Stepping into a gallery occupied by an even moderately famous object we now find ourselves adrift in a sea of screens held aloft as each visitor tries to capture what's in front of them.

As well as shaping the way we experience museums, the digital revolution has also altered how and what they collect. Screens have offered not only new possibilities of digital consumption, but of production. Even if the object produced at the end of a creative process – whether a work of art or of everyday industrial design – remains physical, the process itself is very often digital.

Things are rather more complex when the object itself is digital. Some of the most influential 'objects' of the last decade are apps. But how does a museum collect an 'app'? Does it collect the source code from the developer? Or the app package that we download onto our phones? But which version? And if the app is a conduit to a broader network or platform, do we have to collect that too?

Again, while presenting clear challenges, these questions can be answered in a variety of ways and from those answers a series of 'best practice' guidelines developed. And insofar as digital distraction and shortening attention spans diminish our experience of a museum, there is the counterargument that in a media-saturated world, what many people are looking for are the kinds of authentic, 'slow' experiences that museums are uniquely placed to offer. Meanwhile, the increasing digitization of museum catalogues has led to the prediction that their presence online would reduce the number of people who would then subsequently visit. On the contrary, the more museums put online the more, it seems, people are driven to visit in person.

So, while potentially threatening the role and status of the museum, the digital revolution has in fact offered new ways to engage with museums and their collections, which potentially dramatically expand their reach and impact. If we accept that the digital revolution offers a new way of experiencing the world, then the museum has the potential to act as a vital platform for the new forms of cultural interaction.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

With the rapidly developing digital world it's no surprise museums are starting to allow mobiles and are themselves becoming immersed in the online culture. However, I don't think this change is really positive.

The essence of museums has always been to provide a quiet experience for the visitors, hoping to get a break from the media-saturated world. With the digital revolution, however, people have become unable to get that. Many of the exhibits become presented online and the exposure to mobiles lowers our attention spans, making us unable to concentrate for long.

Some might argue, this offers new ways of experiencing the world and increases the number of people interested in museums, but the cost at which this comes is, in my opinion, not worth it.

In the end, there's no avoiding the digital revolution, and while it's not always helpful, we should expect even bigger increases in museums going online.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel allows you to better understand and evaluate the bigger picture of your life.

Lately travel has become much more accessible and popular. With new technologies journeys have become a pleasant reality and though not everyone can enjoy the experience of travelling, there is no denying that those who can get a better understanding of life.

The nations of the world are spread around the globe and are all unique. Thus a man, who has spent his whole life in one place will never get the full picture of what life is like. His knowledge is limited by the traditions he was raised in and his experience can be different from one of a person living miles away.

Moreover, a man raised in a wealthy country will have never experienced the horrors of living in poverty. He might think life is hard, but only until he visits a place, where life is even worse.

This kind of experience opens one's eyes and mind, allows a person to compare the living conditions, habits and cultures of diverse nations, in the end creating a powerful human, able to adapt to unexpected difficulties, having the combined knowledge of many peoples and valuing their life right.

Overall, travelling gets in touch with your roots and lets you understand yourself and others better, and whether you've travelled half the world or haven't left your country it's wise to always continue journeying.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

The card said, "Beware of the storm in your future". The man and his wife looked at each other bemused. They were afraid of superstitions and decided not to board the train and return home. Later that day the couple was eating lunch peacefully while watching the TV and suddenly the program was interrupted by urgent news. There had been a tornado at the exact seaside where the couple was supposed to be resting! The man gaped at the screen thinking he was glad he had gotten that fortune card!

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

Mr. and Mrs. Cole once got a vase as a Christmas gift from their neighbor Mrs. Green. They had no clue what to do with it and decided to give it away to their friend Mr. Jade, who was a friendly man, happy to get a present. Mr. Cole congratulated Mr. Jade on the upcoming holidays and gifted the him the unpleasant vase.

Mr. Jade was pleased to have the gift, however, later while smoking the only thought he had in mind was, "I really don't like this monstrosity". The next day he realized he couldn't stand this ugly vase and feeling guilty gave it away to a lanky man called Mr. Rogers.

Mr. Rogers put the vase on the edge of his table, but the more he looked at it, the more he hated it. At last he took the gift to his friend, a collector, who put it on display, where Mrs. Green saw it.

The next day she knocked on the Coles' door with an evil grin. They were in utter shock to receive the gift back again!

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress in Washington is certainly the largest library in the world. It's collections are incredibly diverse: books, manuscripts, photographs, volumes in Braille for blind, rolls of microfilm, magnetic tape, sheets of music and each other form of preserved thought.

The Library of Congress, the world's largest building devoted holly to library uses, occupies two city squares facing the Capitol Grounds. Begun in 1886, completed in 1897, the buildings cover about 3.5 acres. The main reading hall accommodates 1,000 readers at the time and is free to anyone above 16 years of age. To meet the continuant increase of the Library's collections a few annexed buildings were later constructed on the same grounds.

The Library is rich in musical events. An audience of 500 sits provides free concerts and lectures. Special facilities for serious research include 50 individual study rooms and a lot of special desks.
