I. Comment on the following extract (use 100–150 words).

The Museum Now. Breaking Down Barriers to Entry

The first and oldest of the three characteristics that define a museum is its collection; there is simply no museum without a collection. Yet the ways we typically understand a museum's collection is, and has always been, heavily weighted towards the objects themselves, rather than the arguably equally important series of decisions that determined how that collection was brought together. Moreover when we visit a museum we rarely see more than a tiny percentage of the objects in its collection. Again, the decisions about what to display and what to keep in storage are seldom acknowledged.

The second key characteristic of the museum is that the collection should be accessible to the public. However, that a collection is open to the public does not automatically mean those who visit are representative of the public. Museum audiences typically skew towards better-educated and more affluent demographics. Free entry is no panacea. Cost is just one barrier to entry, and, while important, may not actually be the biggest one. Social and cultural barriers can be just as strong. Despite some of their best efforts, museums are frequently perceived as elitist and unwelcoming – especially when housed in grand classical edifices as so many still are. Just as a museum cannot consider itself to be a truly public institution unless its staff's demographic makeup reflects the public at large, the same can be said of its audience. Museums cannot be properly public institutions unless they can reach and connect with everyone. Many museums are making huge and consistent efforts to do this, but what is required is perhaps something more profound. Rather than defining themselves as existing somehow beyond the quotidian realities of daily life, museums need to find ways to dissolve the boundaries that exist between them and the outside world – its identities, cultures, politics and everyday realities. Museums have already begun to look to the digital sphere which, as we have already seen, offers a range of new and transformative possibilities of connecting to, and engaging with, a much broader public.

This takes us to the third and final fundamental characteristic of the museum: that it is housed in a building which acts as both container and symbol of the museum's collection and broader mission. This twin function has always been part of the concept of a museum.

(From "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins)

The presented extract from "The Museum. From its Origins to the 21st Century" by Owen Hopkins breaks down the key characteristics of museums and the problems that often plague museums. I could not agree more with the talking points of this extract. While museums are great in concept, the execution often leaves better to be desired. In my opinion, most problems outlined in the extract are directly spawned from museums still following very conservative doctrines of operation, as it was decades, if not centuries, ago. To fix these issues, these dogmas need to be put out of practice. The shift towards free entry and exploring the digital space is great but there is much more to be done if we are to see sufficient results.

II. Comment on the statement from the book “Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures” by Robert Maisel (use 180–220 words):

Travel makes you a more grateful person.

"Travel makes you a more grateful person", so says a quote from "Transform Through Travel: Connecting Across Cultures" by Robert Maisel. But is that true? Let's take a closer look at this statement.
On the one hand, it does ring true for many people. Travelling around the world lets you see a variety of countries, their people and their cultures, which may prompt some to reflect on themselves and their life and change for the better. After all, if we need to coexist together, doesn't being grateful make it easier?

On the other hand, travelling might spoil some people. Imagine living a lavish life on the seaside and not having to care about responsibilities while other people toil to support your vain lifestyle. It's a given that some individuals might shift to being more selfish and prejudiced through travelling.

So, does travel make you a more grateful person? Yes, it does, if you are willing to become a better person yourself. Otherwise, it may either leave you as you were before or it may make you worse as a person.

III. Write the appropriate ending to the story given below (use 60-90 words):

A man and his wife had arranged to have a holiday at the seaside. They were waiting at the railway station for their train when the man saw a weighing-machine near the bench on which they were sitting. It was one of those weighing machines that give cards on which one's fortune is printed as well as one's weight.

The man decided to weigh himself, so he went to the machine, got on it, put a penny in, and a card came out. The man took it back to his wife, and she read it out to him, because he had not got his glasses.

Think of the ending to the story and write it in the space below.

His wife glanced at the card and giggled before reading it out loud to her husband. "This person will find true happiness in the solace of vacation", she read out, giggling a bit more. "Just as we had planned!", her giddy voice brought a smile to the man's face. The train had also arrived at that moment. They knew this was going to be the greatest vacation of their lives.

IV. Create your own story based on the series of pictures (use 150–180 words):

There once was a poor man named Alfred. On one fateful Tuesday, he managed to convince a nice woman to go on a date. But there was one dilemma that wouldn't leave Alfred alone: what will he bring as a gift for his date? He didn't have the money to buy a box of chocolates or flowers. "Oh, flowers! I can take some from the park! I'm sure no one will mind", he thought to himself while walking near one such park. Alfred went in, looking around to make sure no one spots him picking flowers from the beautiful flower bed in the middle of the park's greenery. The coast was clear. He sneaked up and picked a bouqet of tulips. Alfred would've almost make it out of the park unnoticed, if not for a police officer. He grabbed Alfred, took his flowers and wrote him a fine for vandalism. The flowers were still nice and fresh, though. The police officer brought these flowers home for his wife, who was immensely happy about this gift.

V. Find and underline ten mistakes (lexical and grammar) and write the wrong variant in the left and the correct variant in the right column of the table below the text.

The Library of Congress

The Library of Congress has millions items in over 125 languages and a myriad of formats. To provide access to this materials, a number of catalogs has been created on cards, in book-form, in micro-form, and in machine-reading form.

The Main Catalog, maintained for the public, and the Official Catalog, maintained for the stuff, provide an overview of the resources of the Library. The Old Catalog refers to the existing card catalogs for material cataloged through 1980. The New Catalog refers to the bibliographic file containing all post-1980 cataloging with the acception of certain cataloging data for material in non-Roman scripts.

The information explosion of the last 25 years has left major libraries no choice but to deal with the storage and accessing of information via new, more efficient methods. Not only it has become physically impossible to contain and house the yearly incoming flood of new books and manuscripts, but the acid contents of most paper manufactured in the 19th century is already crumbling entire libraries to dust. Consequently, attempts are currently being made to preserve information in less perishable and more compact form. The computerization of the Card Catalog is only the most visual aspect of a multi-million-dollars revolution in what the Library of Congress is and will become.
